Boss Hogg's BBQ to Open Carry-Out Restaurant in Winlock Next Month; "It's Not Your Average Backyard Barbecue," Owner Says

Smith's boyfriend, Joel Dillinger, opening to smoker to check out the meat.

By Celene Fitzgerald
cfitzgerald@chronline.com

Amy Smith smoked her first brisket as a way to keep a family tradition alive and to honor her father, who cooked a brisket every year or the Fourth of July before he died in 2016. Her first brisket was well received by the family and friends.

"After he passed away, I wanted to carry on that tradition so I smoked my first brisket in 2016 and everybody loved it. I was like 'wow I just threw my dad under the bus. Mine was way better than his brisket,'" Smith joked. "And so I just kind of developed passion for trying new things and smoking different products. That's how it started — with honoring my dad and then it just turned into a passion."

Smith kept experimenting with flavors and is now turning her passion into a business— Boss Hogg's BBQ and Catering LLC in Winlock.

Smith, with her boyfriend and fellow pit boss, Joel Dillinger's help, has been catering for larger events — weddings, parties, large family dinners, and selling her food at different events, such as local farmer's markets and community gatherings since in June of 2019. Smith said that although the recipes are hers, Dillinger is always a huge help and he has perfected the ribs.

Smith said the response over the past months is what pushed her to open a restaurant — people who have eaten Smith's smoked meats have told her it's the best barbecue in Lewis County.

Smith is now a pit boss with a restaurant and a love for cooking her pork, chicken, beef and turkey in a low-and-slow style that she says makes all the difference. The southern-style meats can be paired with several sides of which Smith says the pepper jack smoked mac and cheese is the most popular. Hungry customers can also get loaded baked beans, corn, coleslaw, mixed greens and corn muffins. Smith said that she is beginning to experiment with plant-based meats for vegetarians.

"It's all smoked. We use a pull-behind smoker trailer. We use various fruit woods to smoke the food. It's a low-and-slow style so we don't rush it. A brisket takes about 20 hours," Smith said.

Boss Hogg's BBQ and Catering LLC's location at 109 E. Walnut St. in Winlock is on track to open in about two weeks and Smith said a formal grand opening is planned for spring when the weather is nicer. Updates and more information can be found on Boss Hogg's Facebook page.

"We are hoping to have the kitchen finished next week and then we have to wait for the permitting. Everything is moving along quicker than we thought. We're estimating about two weeks until we open... We're planning, if all goes well, we'll have the grand opening when the weather is nicer and have some sort of shindig or hoedown in our parking lot with live music," Smith said.

The ribs are coated in a dry rub and the barbecue sauce is served on the side so those we just want the taste created by the smoking can forgo the sauce, which is how most people seem to prefer them, Smith said.

"A lot of people love the mac and cheese. I would say our most unique item is the Cajun meatloaf. I haven't had anybody not like our ribs yet," Smith said.

Josiah, Sunni, and Jude, Smith's kids, help out when they have orders for large parties and Dillinger, who owns a construction company, will take the day off to help Smith smoke large quantities of meat.

"It's really a partnership with me and Joel. It's family-run. The kids help out and I do what I can on my own and when we have to pull the big guy in — we pull him in," Smith said.

Smith says she feels her food stands out because of the low-and-slow cooking method that sometimes requires the meat to be in the smoker for up to 20 hours. She says they focus on using quality ingredients.

The meat is currently sourced from Smart Foodservices, a wholesale restaurant supply company, but Smith said that after the restaurant is up-and-running she would like to partner with a local farm to source her ingredients.

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My son is engaged to a young woman I'll call Carla. They are currently living with my husband and me to save money and pay off bills. They fight often. Because of this, my husband and I were not excited when they flippantly announced their engagement and also flippantly announced their wedding date recently. I just said, "That's nice" or "congratulations."

I know this is not my relationship, and they are adults, but should I explain why we cannot get excited about it? I don't dislike Carla, and I would be truly OK if they could make each other happy most of the time. But because of their arguing and unresolved issues, I do not have confidence in their relationship.

I think they may ask us for money to help with wedding expenses, and unfortunately, I feel it would be throwing money away. How awful is that? I don't want to create hard feelings if they can make this work. Advice? — UNENTHUSED MOM IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR MOM: If you are asked to chip in for the wedding expenses, consider making it conditional. Tell your son and Carla that you are deeply concerned because of the amount of fighting you see they do, and if they will agree to premarital counseling, you will be glad to help them.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are in our 60s and have two grown sons. We work full time and are financially secure.

The conundrum: We have one grandchild who will soon turn 1. I asked my daughter-in-law for gift ideas because I know she already has more than enough clothes and toys. My daughter-in-law promptly responded that they will soon be needing a new car seat, and that she'd also like a nice running stroller.

They both have good jobs. They can easily afford such items. Now I feel that if we don't produce one of these as a gift, she'll think we're cheap, but honestly, I don't consider such things to be gifts for the baby, simply items parents should be responsible for if they can afford them. I really would like to get our grandbaby something unique that will withstand the test of time. Now I wish I hadn't asked! — REGRETFUL INQUIRING GRANDMA

DEAR REGRETFUL: You may wish you hadn't asked, but you did. While you're not obligated to give the gifts your daughter-in-law asked for, in the interest of family harmony, it would be a good idea to give her one of the necessities she requested. And in the future, DON'T ASK!

DEAR ABBY: In my work, the department I'm responsible for has employees working in various locations throughout the U.S. I want to have an annual picnic at my home to show appreciation to my team. The problem is, I do not have the budget to pay for travel for employees who work in remote offices. Should I not invite these remote employees? Should I invite them but inform them that their travel won't be reimbursed, or just not have the picnic at all? — NOT ENOUGH IN PENNSYLVANIA

DEAR NOT ENOUGH: Rather than invite workers from all over the country to a celebration you know they won't be able to attend, consider having a small gathering at your home for the locals. Send gift cards for the favorite restaurants of the employees in distant locations. It would be thoughtful and generous and would cost far less than subsidizing travel expenses.

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend and I have been dating for more than a decade. We're nearly 30 now. We are happy not being married, and we both agreed early in our relationship that we would not have kids.

All of a sudden, my boyfriend has decided he wants children. I said maybe in the future, but he feels we're running out of time. I still don't want kids, and it's for selfish reasons. I enjoy traveling, having time to myself and just the two of us, peace and quiet, being able to do what I want when I want without having to worry about kids. Is that so wrong? Where do we go from here? — AT ODDS IN MONTANA

DEAR AT ODDS: After 10-plus years, "the future" has arrived. It appears you and your boyfriend have reached a large fork in the road. From here you either go your separate ways or agree to relationship counseling to see if there may be a way to bridge this gap.

DEAR ABBY: For the last 25 years, we have gone on several weekend getaways with another couple. They are now suggesting a one-week vacation together. The issue is, they constantly either talk to or text their children while we are with them. They call to tell them the weather, where we're eating, get updates on their various sporting events, etc.

We also have children and grandchildren, but we wait until we return home to reconnect and hear about their weekend and tell about ours. We love our kids, but we don't need to be constantly connected.

Except for us, this couple's entire social life appears to revolve around their children's lives, and it is pretty much all they talk about. We're not sure we can tolerate this for an entire week. We don't want to lose these friends, but don't know how to decline a week of this. Please advise. — VACATION FROM THE VACATION

DEAR VACATION: Constantly texting and calling in the presence of others is rude. Because you are hesitant to call them on it, try this: Unless they know you take weeklong vacations with other friends, tell them you prefer shorter visits with other couples. In their case, it's the truth.

DEAR ABBY: I recently received an email from the grade school-aged son of a close friend, which included a link requesting funding to support his school sports program. My friend told me to expect such an email.

I'm not certain how to respond, as I always encouraged my children to communicate face-to-face when soliciting funds for their school programs, but that was years ago, and I realize this is a new era. It just seems so impersonal to ask for money electronically, especially when I barely know the young man. Are my expectations wrong? How would you handle this? — CHECK'S IN THE E-MAIL

DEAR CHECK'S IN: Despite how the request was made, if you want to support the program, do so. If not, then don't. Personally, I would ignore the email, and if I was asked about it, I would politely decline.

DEAR ABBY: I've been married to my husband for 21 years. We've had our ups and downs, but our relationship is solid.

For the last year, I have watched as my husband has become closer to my sister. It started with phone calls every once in a while to check on how she's doing. (She lives in our second home in a different state.) Then it turned into hours-long conversations a few times a week. When I told him it made me very uncomfortable, he said they are just "very, very good friends."

About six months ago, he started calling me by her name at inappropriate times. I told him he has been murmuring her name in my ear while we're in bed. He said he was sorry, and he would make some changes to the relationship with my sister. The changes he made were to talk to her every night for hours at a time. Then he needed to go to our other house "to get it ready for winter." He was alone with her for two weeks and then extended his stay by another week because she is "having health issues."

I told him I think he's having an emotional affair with my sister, but he disagreed. I'm in constant panic mode and don't know what to do. Any advice? — SUSPICIOUS IN THE NORTHWEST

DEAR SUSPICIOUS: I don't blame you for being as upset as you are because, to say the least, what your husband has been doing is inappropriate. Have you talked to your sister about this? If you haven't, you should.

I am surprised that you didn't go with him when he went to visit "Sissy" and help her with her "health issues." That he extended his stay with her makes me wonder if there may be more going on than an emotional affair.

You need more support than a newspaper column can provide. Make an appointment with a licensed marriage and family therapist, if only to calm your panic and gain an ally. If you can convince your husband to go, it might allay your fears. But if he isn't interested — go alone.

DEAR ABBY: My mother passed away six years ago. I have two older brothers and a father in my immediate family. There was a rift between my brothers and me several years ago. I made clear to them in a letter how badly they had hurt me. Instead of apologizing, they choose to no longer have a relationship with me.

Dad refuses to get involved. He says his kids are adults, and we should work it out. Recently, he admitted he was verbally abusive to my mom while I was growing up. I remember it well from my childhood. I believe my brothers mimicked his behavior with me while I was growing up and as adults.

I resent my dad for not helping to resolve this issue. He was an angry and insecure person while I was growing up and took things out on Mom. What's the best way for me to address this with him instead of harboring resentment and avoiding a relationship with him? — WITHOUT FAMILY IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR WITHOUT FAMILY: What exactly do you expect your father to do at this point? Order your brothers to apologize? He is neither willing nor capable of doing it, as he has made clear.

Accept that this is the way things are and keep a cordial relationship with your father if you can. It would also be healthy for you to concentrate on maintaining relationships with people who treat you well and who make you feel accepted and valued. And recognize that THOSE people are your "family" rather than the dysfunctional one into which you were born.

Down the rabbit hole

Mystery series 'Dispatches from Elsewhere' premieres on AMC

By Sarah Passingham
TV Media

An alternate reality hiding just below the surface of the world we see every day is about to be revealed. On Sunday, March 1, a new mystery series, "Dispatches from Elsewhere," premieres on AMC, and it follows a group of strangers on a journey of discovery that blurs the lines between what's real and what's not.

"Dispatches from Elsewhere" is a game that brings together four people that are searching for meaning in their lives. Each player has been won over and introduced to the elaborate alternate-reality game by the charismatic leader of the Jejune Institute, Octavio, played by Richard E. Grant ("Star Wars: Episode IX – The Rise of Skywalker, " 2019). As they chase clues and search for the mysterious and missing Clara (Cecilia Balagot, "Girl Meets World"), they begin to question whether the game is really just a game.

Our four participants are Fredwynn, portrayed by André Benjamin ("American Crime"); Janice, played by the delightful Sally Field ("Hello, My Name Is Doris," 2015); Simone, played by Eve Lindley ("Mr. Robot"); and Peter, played by Jason Segel, who most TV fans will remember as Marshall from "How I Met Your Mother." As the players unravel the game's mysteries, they become entangled in the web of the secret society that springs from the Jejune Institute, and they begin to believe they are seeing a new reality in plain sight.

Segel not only stars in "Dispatches from Elsewhere," he is the show's creator and has a hand in every aspect of the series. He's a writer, executive producer and he directed the pilot episode, too. If you consider his previous screenwriting work, Segel's imaginative fingerprint appears to be all over this series. Though it's a tough thing to do in Hollywood, he has a history of getting his passion projects off the ground. Segel penned and executive produced "The Muppets" in 2011, but that wasn't his first foray into puppetry. It has been well documented that the Dracula puppet opera featured in the 2008 film "Forgetting Sarah Marshall" is actually snippets of a full musical that Segel wrote before he began writing that film's script. It is not surprising that he has now helped create this odd, winding mystery series – the guy is much more strange and interesting than the role he's best known for would suggest.

The secrets of this new show's freshman season remain just that for now – secret. Keeping the highlights and surprises under wraps is very important to Segel. At a January Television Critics Association event, he said, "I actually don't want to give too much away if we are lucky enough to continue. It's an exciting experience – we'll see where it goes."

If the mystery of the Jejune Institute isn't enough to entice prospective audiences, "Dispatches from Elsewhere" boasts one of the most exciting ensemble casts in recent memory. Benjamin, perhaps better-known as André 3000 of the band Outkast, has been building an impressive filmography since his debut as Silk Brown in the 2003 crime movie "Hollywood Homicide." He starred in "Four Brothers" in 2005 and made the move to television in 2016 for the second season of the anthology series "American Crime."

Field is a Hollywood veteran known for consistently incredible performances in virtually every genre and medium. She shines in heartwarming films such as "Steel Magnolias" (1989), "Forrest Gump" (1993) and "Mrs. Doubtfire" (1994), as well as action films such as "Smokey and the Bandit" (1977), her early TV shows "Gidget" and "The Flying Nun," and her recent roles in quirky dramedies such as Netflix's "Maniac."

Next to one of television and film's most celebrated actresses stands one of the most exciting fresh faces in the industry. Eve Lindley has already landed roles in some of the most buzzed-about recent series, such as "Outsiders," "Tales of the City" and "High Maintenance," but it is clear that this is only the beginning of a long and prolific acting career.

At the same TCA event in January, Lindley shared how meaningful it was to portray a trans woman as a trans woman herself, saying, "I read the script and I was so moved. ... It was one of the best depictions of a trans character I ever read. I felt close to her. Jason [Segel] allowed me to interject a lot of myself into her."

Jason Segel stars in "Dispatches from Elsewhere"

The premise for "Dispatches from Elsewhere" comes from some interesting source material. There is a "real" Jejune Institute, and it is the subject of the appropriately named 2013 documentary film, "The Institute." Documentary might be a generous term for what that feature is, as the institute itself was involved in its production. Between 2008 and 2011, the creators of "The Institute" amassed thousands of participants in their game and sent them all on silly adventures, like dancing with a sasquatch on a sidewalk. But they also asked them to search for a woman named Eva. The game was eventually disbanded, but it left participants questioning how much of what was revealed to them during the experience was real, which infused the whole operation with a cult-like quality.

Join the others at the Jejune Institute and follow the clues when "Dispatches from Elsewhere" premieres Sunday, March 1, on AMC.

Kiefer Sutherland in "24"

By Jessica Gosse
TV Media

This action-packed TV series ran for nine seasons, all of which are available to stream now — that's a lot of binge time! Kiefer Sutherland ("Designated Survivor") stars as Jack Bauer, a highly trained U.S. intelligence operative working with the CTU (Counter Terrorist Unit) in Los Angeles. Jack has a knack for sniffing out trouble, and often finds himself right in the middle of it. As he hunts for bad guy after bad guy (and some of these guys are REALLY bad), he simultaneously saves thousands (maybe millions) of lives, and puts the people he loves at risk. Elisha Cuthbert ("The Ranch") appears in multiple seasons as Kim, Jack's daughter, while Kim Raver ("Grey's Anatomy") plays Jack's main love interest, Audrey Raines, in Seasons 4 through 6 — both of which end up in mortal peril more times than you can count. Many of his allies come and go throughout the series, but the most consistent of Jack's friends are also some of the most compelling characters. Chloe O'Brien (Mary Lynn Rajskub, "Brooklyn Nine-Nine") is, by far, Jack's best asset and biggest support, and you'll find her prickly demeanor and overall awkwardness endearing before long. Tony Almeida (Carlos Bernard, "The Inspectors"), Michelle Dessler (Reiko Aylesworth, "Scorpion") and Bill Buchanan (James Morrison, "Twin Peaks") are some of my favorite recurring characters — there are so many to choose from, and you'll fall in love with them all. The series also features more than its fair share of guest stars, including big names like Regina King ("Watchmen"), James Cromwell ("The Young Pope"), Dennis Hopper ("Crash"), John Voight ("Ray Donovan"), Ricky Schroder ("NYPD Blue") and Sean Astin ("Stranger Things"). Dive into this series if you're looking for an extended thrill ride.

"Taboo"

Tom Hardy ("Peaky Blinders") stars in this dark FX series that was co-created and co-written by his own father, Chips Hardy ("Helping Henry"). The first season is available now, and two more are planned, though there's no word yet on when we can expect them. The younger Hardy plays James Keziah Delaney, the estranged son of London shipping mogul. Upon receiving news of his father's death, James returns to London after spending 12 years in Africa, and brings with him a number of stolen diamonds. An unconventional man with foreign habits, James seems to be a fish out of water in London, but he also has a plan and the means to carry it out. He pits himself against the powerful and sinister East India Company, and the ensuing action and drama is thrilling and beautifully staged. This series is worth a watch for the sets, costumes and scenery alone, but the performances outshine even those. While Hardy is as electric as ever, Jesse Buckley ("Wild Rose," 2019) and Oona Chaplin ("Game of Thrones") steal every scene they appear in, and that's just scraping the surface of the talent involved in this series. It's a smart, gritty show, and it will hook you.

Tom Hardy stars in "Taboo"

"RuPaul's Drag Race"

RuPaul is finally getting some wider recognition (maybe you saw him host "Saturday Night Live" last month, or his stint in Netflix's "Grace & Frankie"), but he's been the centerpiece of "RuPaul's Drag Race" for 11 seasons now (soon to be 12). You can watch six of those seasons now, on Hulu. Paul is the most dynamic host on television (arguably in television history), and watching him judge and mentor hopeful drag susperstars is as fun as it is heartwarming. In each season, a group of drag queens with varying experience compete for the top spot, and as they face mini challenges, maxi challenges, runway challenges and the judges' panel, each competitor learns a little something about themselves and about their art. It's an addictive series, so if you're looking for something fun to lift your spirits and dazzle your senses, this is the right choice for you.

Tom Brittney, Robson Green and James Norton star in "Grantchester"

Keri Russell and Matthew Rhys in "The Americans"

"Run the Race" (2019)

Former football star Tim Tebow takes on a new role as producer of this high school football film coming to Prime on Tuesday, Feb. 25. Brothers Zach (Tanner Stine, "Impulse") and Dave (Evan Hofer, "Dwight in Shining Armor") haven't had an easy life — their mother died when they were young and their dad (Kristoffer Polaha, "Ringer") walked out on them — but the one thing they have going for them is that Zach is the star football player at their school. When Zach finds out he's being scouted by the University of Florida for a scholarship, he sees it as a ticket out of their dead-end town, but his dream is shattered when he is injured while at a party and is unable to play football. Zach is convinced his chance to get out is gone until his coach (Mykelti Williamson, "Chicago P.D.") tells him they give scholarships for track, and both brothers set out to earn themselves track scholarships.

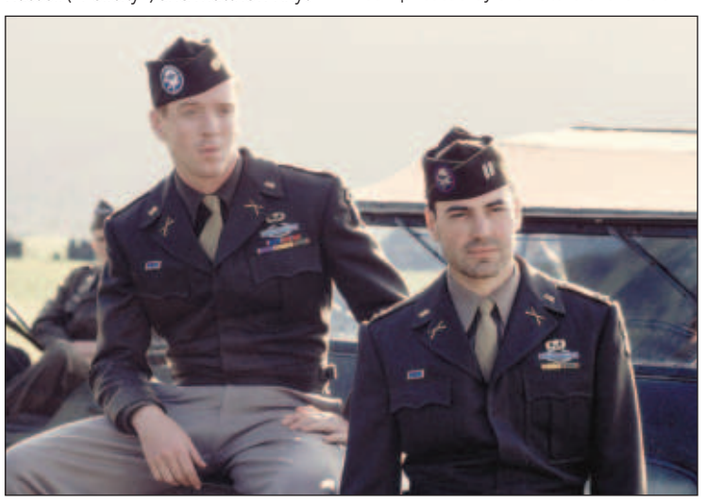
"Grantchester" Season 4

Meet the newest vicar in Grantchester when Season 4 of this popular drama (based on the books by Jame Runcie) debuts on Prime on Tuesday, Feb. 25. Set in the 1950s, the series stars James Norton ("Happy Valley") as Sidney Chambers, an Anglican vicar and war veteran who begins sleuthing after a woman begs him to look into a death that was ruled a suicide. Chambers eventually begins working with Det. Geordie Keating (Robson Green, "Strike Back"). The two make an unlikely duo, with Chambers being extremely charming and Keating being extremely grumpy, but they go on to solve many local cases. The end of Season 3 saw Chambers lose faith in the church and hand in his resignation. He had plans to move to London but ended up staying instead. Now, a new vicar has come to Grantchester: Rev. Will Davenport (Tom Brittney, "UnREAL"). Davenport is not your average vicar — he's young, has a love for rock music and rides a motorcycle. Season 4 features shifting dynamics as Davenport begins working with Keating and Chambers.

BINGE THIS:

"The Americans"

This criminally underappreciated series is available now in its entirety, and all six seasons will keep you riveted. Keri Russell ("Felicity") and Matthew Rhys ("A Beautiful Day in the Neighborhood," 2019) star as Elizabeth and Philip Jennings, an American couple who run a travel agency in Washington D.C. When they're not organizing fancy trips for their clients, hanging out with their neighbors or parenting their two children, Elizabeth and Philip run high-risk missions of seduction, deception, infiltration and murder — right, I forgot to mention that they're embedded Russian spies whose real names are Nadezhda and Mischa. This series is a unique mix of family drama, spy thriller, romance and coming-of-age story, and both Russell and Rhys turn in incredible performances time and again. It's fascinating to watch this couple evolve. Their lives together began as an assignment, but they find their way to a real love and appreciation that is then repeatedly complicated by the nature of their clandestine work. Noah Emmerich ("The Spy") also stars as the Jennings's neighbor, Stan, an FBI agent and Philip's best friend, and you can expect to be blown away by Holly Taylor ("The Unsettling"), who plays the Jennings's daughter, Paige. Dive into "The Americans," this is a binge you won't regret.



Damian Lewis and Ron Livingston as seen in "Band of Brothers"

"Band of Brothers"

This 2001 HBO miniseries holds up extraordinarily well, and if you haven't seen it yet, you're missing out. You can stream it now, on Prime. The ensemble cast includes Damian Lewis ("Billions"), Ron Livingston ("Loudermilk"), Donnie Wahlberg ("Blue Bloods"), Michael Cudlitz ("The Walking Dead"), Scott Grimes ("The Orville"), Neal McDonough ("Project Blue Book") and many more, and each turns in a heart-rending performance as a World War II soldier on the front lines, and sometimes behind them. The series follows the men of "Easy" Company, 2nd Battalion, 506th Parachute Infantry Regiment of the 101st Airborne from their stateside training to the end of the war, and each character is based on a real-life soldiers, some of which can be seen in pre-episode interviews discussing their experiences. This is a masterpiece, a tribute to all those who have served, and one of the truest depictions of World War II ever captured on film.

"I Am Not Okay With This"

Based on the graphic novel of the same name by Charles Forsman, this new coming of age series premieres Wednesday, Feb. 26. Sophia Lillis ("Sharp Objects") stars as Sydney, an awkward teenage girl facing the difficulties of high school, including being (secretly) in love with her best friend, Dina (Sofia Bryant, "The Code"), and dealing with issues within her family. As if being a teenager isn't hard enough, Sydney's life gets even more complicated when she starts exhibiting telekinetic powers that flare up at the worst possible moments. Luckily, she has Dina as well as her neighbor and other best friend, Stanley Barber (Wyatt Oleff, "It," 2017), to help her figure things out.

"Altered Carbon" Season 2

This sci-fi/cyberpunk thriller is back for a sophomore season on Thursday, Feb. 27. Season 1 introduced us to a dystopian future where it's possible to live forever. A person's consciousness is contained in a disk called a "stack," which can be transferred to a new body (or "sleeve") as needed. The possibility of infinite life has contributed to an even greater disparity between the rich and poor, and the ultra-wealthy now reside as far above the Earth's surface as they can, and live for centuries longer than those below. Takeshi Kovacs, a highly-trained operative with a storied past, is revived to investigate when an insanely rich business man's sleeve is murdered and his stack is tampered with. Kovacs is played by Joel Kinnaman ("Hanna") in the first season, but Season 2 finds Kovacs in a new, enhanced sleeve — this time, he's played by Anthony Mackie ("Avengers: End Game," 2019). Kovacs has spent decades traveling the universe, but he returns now to his home planet, along with his Edgar Allen Poe-themed AI (Chris Conner, "American Crime Story"), in search of Quell (Renée Elise Goldsberry, "The Good Wife"), his former mentor and lover. This season promises just as much action, suspense and world-building as the first, and you can watch it starting Thursday.

Elaiza Ikeda stars in "Followers"

"Followers"

Don't miss the premiere of this Japanese Netflix original series on Thursday, Feb. 27. The show revolves around two very different women living in Tokyo whose lives begin to overlap. Limi Nara (Miki Nakatani, "Ghost Writer") is a fashion photographer who, despite having fame and an extremely successful career, still wants more. At almost 40 years old, she wants to be a mother. On the other side of things is Natsume Hyakuta (Elaiza Ikeda, "Room Laundering"), a young aspiring actress and model whose career is floundering. Despite being confident and making assurances that she will raise the child alone, Limi struggles to find a man willing to father her child. Meanwhile, after Limi photographs Natsume and posts the photo on Instagram, Natsume's career begins to take off, but her confidence and sense of self-worth is drastically affected by how many followers she has and what they say in their comments.

"All The Bright Places"

Finch (Justice Smith, "The Get Down") and Violet (Elle Fanning, "Mary Shelley," 2017) seem to have nothing in common in this poignant film that debuts Friday, Feb. 28, on Netflix. She's a cheerleader, super popular and on student council, while he is obsessed with death and is considered a freak by most of his classmates. But when they run into each other at the top of the school's bell tower, both intending to jump, they bond and talk each other down. The pair become friends as Violet tells Finch about her survivors guilt and how she feels responsible for the car accident that killed her sister, and Finch tells Violet about his depression and suicidal thoughts.

Anthony Mackie stars in "Altered Carbon"

"Queen Sono"

Pearl Thusi ("Quantico") stars as the eponymous Queen Sono in the first-ever African Netflix original series, premiering Friday, Feb. 28. Sono has led a troubled life. She had to be bailed out of jail for the first time at the age of 16, but turned things around and she is now a top-tier spy for a South African agency working to improve the lives of African citizens. The series follows Sono as she takes on increasingly dangerous missions while also handling difficulties in her personal life with friends, family and her therapist (Khathu Ramabulana, "Shadow").

hollywood Q&A

By Adam Thomlison
TV Media

Q: I need help finding a song (and a movie). The movie was from the '80s and was about a friendly robot of some kind. What was the song that played during the chase scene at the end?

A: This is surely a proud moment in the history of "Short Circuit 2" (1988).

Most people remember the song "Holding Out for a Hero," by Welsh singer Bonnie Tyler, from the movie "Footloose" (1984), a much more successful film that's now considered a classic. "Short Circuit 2" is not as fondly remembered (a sequel to a movie with a pretty limited premise: What if robots were sassy?).

The song was written specifically for "Footloose," though the scene it was used in wasn't particularly pivotal – it was the somewhat random part near the middle of the movie where two characters play chicken with tractors.

By comparison, the scene that "Holding Out for a Hero" is used for in "Short Circuit 2" is the climactic final chase – arguably the most crucial scene in any movie. In this scene, the robot (named Johnny 5) chases down the bad guy and makes himself into a hero.

Maybe it's this difference in context that makes you remember it better in "Short Circuit 2." Or maybe you just prefer '80s cinematic fantasies about smart-mouthed robots to '80s cinematic fantasies about towns saved by dancing.

Q: I have a couple of problems with how they use English subtitles on shows when a character speaks a foreign language. Why don't they stay on screen long enough for everyone to read them? And why do they leave them in the same spot on the screen even when the background is white (since the type is usually white)?

A: I think the problem here is the "they." There are lots of different "theys," all with "their" own guidelines for how subtitles should look.

That said, there are some standards – subtitles generally aren't in wacky fonts or bright colors and, as you say, they're always at basically the same spot at the bottom of the screen.

Their time on screen is one of the least standardized elements. The British Broadcasting Corporation, for example, gets quite technical, recommending a screen time of "0.3 seconds per word (e.g. 1.2 seconds for a four-word subtitle)." Netflix recommends no more than two lines of text, and each line should be no more than 42 characters wide. The U.K.'s Channel 4 (for some reason the Brits are more transparent about this stuff than we are) says 38 characters wide, or 34 "if wide letters such as M and W occur frequently."

Also, in terms of their time on screen, subtitlers are unfortunately constrained by the speech they're transcribing. If the actors are speaking quickly (think of a Quentin Tarantino movie, for example), the choice is either make the subtitles keep up or else drop some words (and that's not a great solution).

As you can see, things get pretty complicated. But interestingly, almost none of these sets of guidelines even mention placement. It's just assumed the text goes on the bottom of the screen.
